NOVELIST TACKLES MODERN DAY SLAVERY AND SEX TRAFFICKING IN STUNNING DEBUT

“We’re taught in history class that slavery ended with the Civil War,” says author Corban Addison, “when in reality there are more slaves alive in the world today than ever before.” In fact, today there are 27 million slaves in the world. 2 million children are exploited in the global sex trade. Trafficking in persons touches every nation on the globe and reaps $32 billion in profits worldwide each year.

A novel with a literary soul and the taut pacing of a thriller, A Walk Across the Sun (SilverOak / January 2012 / $24.95) delves into the underworld of human trafficking. Through his compelling fiction, Addison exposes the horror faced by millions of women and girls and educates the reader about an important human rights issue.

When a tsunami rages through their coastal town, teenaged sisters Ahalya and Sita are left orphaned and homeless. Searching for protection in a devastated landscape, they are abducted by human traffickers and thrust into a hidden world of sexual violence and illicit commerce, where the most valuable prize is the innocence of a child.

Halfway across the world, Washington, D.C., attorney Thomas Clarke makes the fateful decision to pursue a pro bono sabbatical in India. Learning of the plight of Ahalya and Sita, Clarke makes it his personal mission to rescue them, setting the stage for a heart-stopping showdown with an international network of ruthless criminals.

Spanning three continents, A Walk Across the Sun is an unforgettable tale of love’s transformative power, even in the face of unimaginable obstacles.
